

Micro Footway Programme 2017/18

Micro surfacing is a 'surface treatment' for footways and roads; one which is laid over the top of the existing surface to seal and protect it. It consists of a water-based mix of stones and bitumen which is spread over the existing surface. It can take out minor dips and bumps, restore grip and texture and create a new, waterproof surface.

Micro surfacing is not suitable for all types of footway, for example the mixture will not adhere to concrete, and it will not repair structural faults. Therefore only certain footpaths matching the criteria will be treated in this way.

Footpaths which are not treated either do not meet the criteria for this method and will be considered for other types of repair, are not in a deteriorative state which require repair at this time or may not be Adopted Highway and therefore under the responsibility of Milton Keynes Council's Highway Department. If you wish to report a footway defect you can do so by visiting www.milton-keynes.gov.uk;
