Dear David,

Thank you for your e-mail and the attached response from the Countryside Officer and we await your call.

I note that the Countryside Officer states that their response provides 'further comments' in addition to those previously provided, which have not been shared with us to date. Please can we be provided with a copy of the previous comments which the Countryside Officer refers to, as they appear to together form the consultee's response.

I further note from their response that the Countryside Officer states that he has been instructed to 'disregard the site's allocation'. Please can I ask you to explain this comment, as to take such an approach would clearly be unlawful. Who has instructed the allocation to be disregarded and on what basis? As the Countryside Officer pertinently goes on to note, the allocation of the site itself is evidence of the need for the development and I trust that planning officers recognise the importance of economic growth as a material consideration.

I look forward to your response.

Kind regards,

Graham Robinson MRTPI
