“...I support this statement and agree with the ambitions regarding embodied energy and Passivhaus, a point to not is that Passivhaus is a German energy standard and as German houses are larger than British ones with each resident expected to have 30m² and British residents have nearer 20m² which means the passivhaus standard is suitable for larger detached individual houses or row houses and this should be considered as it may exclude options especially for smaller social housing unless they are in a row”
